

Voters should be ignored in our democracy?

My advice to Mr. Peskin is accept the voice of neighbors who care enough to vote on the issue

March 31, 2006 by Richard H. Vialard, East Dorset in The Manchester Journal

In a democracy, we vote on issues and listen to the voice of the majority. A much better solution to problems than any other methods I am aware of. This works, and yes, I have been on the losing side at times, but as an American, I respect the decision of my fellow voters; or why even bother to go through the process.

Have we not said enough about wind energy? Do we not live here with nature because this is the way of life we enjoy? Do we want outsiders to control it and pollute it with cell/wind towers, billboards, smoke stacks or who knows what next they will come up with once we open the door; cut more ski trails at Magic and Snow Valley?

My advice to Mr. Peskin is accept the voice of neighbors who care enough to vote on the issue or maybe move nearer to the 66 percent interests he seems to think might agree with him if given the chance.

Web link: http://www.manchesterjournal.com/letters/ci_365953...